TALKS

Artists from the Montréal metro Orange Line
 August 13 / Tuesday / 6 p.m.

Montréal's metro system is known for the architectural variety of its stations and for its impressive collection of public art. As part of an exhibition on artists whose works adorn the Orange Line, Benoît Clairoux looks at these artists and their work in pictures and stories. A historian by training and an enthusiast of Montréal's metro since childhood, Benoît Clairoux is the author of Le métro de Montréal, 35 ans déjà, published in 2001 by Éditions Hurtubise HMH. Since 2002 he has served as an adviser to the Société de transport de Montréal (STM) (see Page 14).

Urban development in Montréal during the 20th century:
 from the hideous to the delightful
 August 20 / Tuesday / 6 p.m.

From the end of the 19th century to today, Montréal's development was modeled on major urban concepts prevalent in the Western world. From its early vocation as an industrial city known as the "city of a hundred spires," Montréal, starting in the 1950s, fell prey to new approaches to urban development that destroyed old city centres in favour of suburban growth. Fortunately, this trend lessened over time, giving way to a new era which saw the revitalization of urban life.
 Daniel Bédard, speaker

LUNCHTIME TALKS

Maximum of 60 people. First come, first served

Dear Vieux-Saint-Laurent

June 12 / Wednesday / 12 p.m.

Presented by H el ene Jasmin, a proud Saint-Laurent native
A village core develops around three hubs: church, convent and college. A transportation hub as well, since the time of the omnibus, then the tramway... to today's metro. In Saint-Laurent, you can't talk about transportation without mentioning a key company: Canadair, which eventually became part of the larger Bombardier family of companies. Once-bustling businesses—such as Millar, Lapointe, Grou—slowly disappear as progress makes large strides. In addition to an examination of Saint-Laurent's built heritage, this talk will also focus on Saint-Laurent's old families, notable citizens, artists from the Compagnons de saint Laurent troupe, writers passing through, and the priests and nuns of the Sainte-Croix community. The presentation will feature visual elements (a few hundred pictures) drawn primarily from private archives, notably those of the Jasmin, Larose and Grou families.

A pictorial tour of Alaska

July 10 / Wednesday / 12 p.m.

Visit the Alaska Highway through the pictures of professional photographer David Rogers, with stops in Whitehorse, Skagway and Fairbanks. Then discover Denali National Park, site of Mount McKinley, the highest mountain in North America. After a visit to Anchorage, the speaker takes you on a cruise through Alaska's Inside Passage.

Eight plants on your plate

August 14 / Wednesday / 12 p.m.

A horticulturalist by training, Sylvie Fullum is an expert in the aromatic and medicinal plants of France and Qu ebec. In this talk, she takes a new look at eight often-used but little-known or misunderstood aromatic plants, discussing some of their history and their medical benefits. A tasting will follow the talk.

TALK

BIBLIOTHÈQUE DU BOISÉ EXHIBITION CENTRE

ARTISTS OF THE ORANGE LINE

Exhibition at the Musée des maîtres et artisans du Québec
From July 6 to September 29, 2013

Art surrounds us and, today, every public construction or renovation project is embellished by an original creation commissioned from a professional artist. This wasn't always the case, however. Those who designed Montréal's metro in the 1960s were pioneers in the area of public art, given that from the very beginning of the metro project they were determined to adorn the metro's underground stations and corridors with works of art. This exhibition allows viewers to revisit the works that dot our environment, exploring the context in which the works were produced. Viewers can also learn about the creativity of the Orange Line artists by seeing a never-before-seen collection of their work, which, in their own way, testify to the variety of Québec artistic expression from the 1960s to today.
